LITTLE STORIES OF BEDTIME

A Wonderful Double Surprise

BY THORNTON W. BURGESS.

Surprises may be dreadful; again they may be sad. The only kind at all worth while are those that make you glad.

—Whitefoot the Wood Mouse.

Back in the home which the runaway little mouse had left were sorrow and worry. Mrs. Whitefoot would not leave the three other little mice for fear that one of these might wander off and become lost, so Whitefoot went alone hunting for his lost little son. He hunted everywhere he could think of, but not a trace of him did he find.

Now, of course, Whitefoot knew all the dangers of the Great World and he knew that there was very little chance that a little mouse who knew nothing about these dangers and how

"NO, NO!" CRIED THE LITTLE RUNAWAY. "I WANT TO GO HOME."

To meet them would live long. He kept hunting and hunting, but from the first he had very little hope and his heart was filled with sadness. He found the tracks of Buster Bear. He found where Buster had pulled a stump to pieces and where he had pulled over an old log. He smelled the scent of Reddy Fox had left. In his own mind he was sure that either Buster or Reddy had caught the little runaway.

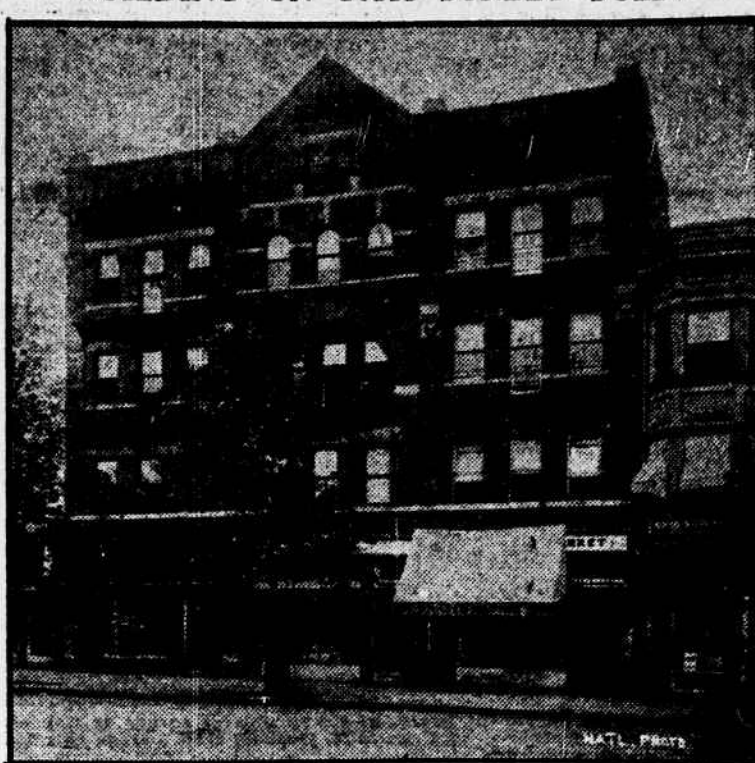

Having looked everywhere he could think of, Whitefoot at last gave up the hunt. "It is of no use," he said. "That poor little fellow didn't know where he had gone. He didn't even know when to sit still and when to run. There isn't a chance in the world that he could have escaped. Why couldn't he have waited until I could have taught him the ways of the Great World?"

Now, it happened that when at last Whitefoot stopped hunting for the lost little mouse he was not far from his old home in a tall, dead stub. He was tired and so decided to run over to that old home and rest a while in the fine soft bed he had there before going back to tell little Mrs. Whitefoot that he hadn't found their lost little son. So he ran over to the tall, dead stub and up it to the entrance to that hollow which had been his home. Without pausing an instant he popped inside. You see he was sure there was no one else there.

If ever there was a surprised Wood Mouse, that one was Whitefoot when he discovered that there was someone in his bed. His nose told him instantly that it was another Wood Mouse, and he was all prepared to be very angry and to drive that other Wood Mouse out. But if he was surprised to find another Wood Mouse there, just try to imagine how much more surprised he was when he discovered that it was his own lost little son. The little mouse was still fast asleep. He had been so tired out that he hadn't wakened at the sound of Whitefoot's claws as he climbed the old stub. Very gently Whitefoot touched the little sleeper. His eyes flew open and he gave a little squeak of fright.

Then he saw who had awakened him and his surprise was as great as had been Whitefoot's, and his joy was greater. "Oh, I'm so glad, so glad!" he kept crying over and over. "How ever did you find me?" Whitefoot didn't tell him that it was chance. Instead he made the little runaway tell him all about his adventures and how he happened to be in that old house. Whitefoot listened gravely. When the little runaway had ended his story Whitefoot said softly, "Now that you are out in the Great World I suppose you want to stay."

"No, no!" cried the little runaway. "I want to go home. I have seen all of the Great World I want to. I'll never, never leave home again."

MARYLAND BOYS DEFEAT BRITISH STOCK JUDGERS

Youths Had Won Trip to England by Downing Thirteen State Teams.

COLLEGE PARK, Md., July 8.—Three boys from Cecil county, Md., competing as the champion American livestock judging team, defeated a team of British juvenile experts at the English royal stock show at Cambridge, England, on July 5, according to a cablegram received here today by Dr. Thomas B. Symons, director of the University of Maryland extension service.

The American team, composed of George Worrlow, sixteen, who made the highest score in the British contest; Warren Rice, seventeen, and Joseph Glackin, fifteen, won the trip to the British show and the right to compete by defeating thirteen other state teams at the southeastern states fair at Atlanta, Ga.

FISTS FLY IN COURT.

Publisher and Lawyer Come to Blows at Assault Trial.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., July 8.—W. C. Dowd, publisher of the Charlotte News, and Edwin H. Bridges, lawyer, engaged in a fist fight in court yesterday during the hearing of the case of J. E. Huneycutt, commissioner of public safety, charged with an assault upon Richard L. Young, Charlotte News reporter, in the city hall.

Both combatants later apologized to W. S. Huggins, justice of the peace, who was conducting the hearing in his office. Commissioner Huneycutt was fined $10 and taxed with the costs after submitting to a charge of simple assault on Mr. Young.

DEPICTS EVOLUTION OF HUMAN HOMES

much larger circle had to be roofed over with heavier rafters. "This put on the simple wattled walls a stronger thrust and a greater burden; there was also a larger surface for the wind to beat against, and these new factors upset the old traditional routine of unskilled workmen. It must have taken many centuries for the Saxon to evolve their system of living with retainers in great oblong halls. If the architectural problems were hard nuts to crack during the first periods of Gothic vaults, they must have been a thousandfold more difficult in primitive times and with primeval methods of construction, and hence the importance of the diameter in building circular huts and halls.

"Few things are more interesting than the fear which early craftsmen had about the security of their roofs; interesting not only because their fear was justified, but because we may read in Matthew Paris how often during the thirteenth century their workmanship was blown down by storms. Even the keeps of great Norman castles were often unroofed, as was proved by a royal survey for Henry III. And thus we get from the great times of architecture evidence in favor of the contention that round primitive houses lost their popularity because of the great difficulties thrust upon inexperienced builders by a large diameter to be roofed securely.

"Again, small round houses had another drawback—they were not friendly to a chieftain's ambitions as to rank and state ceremony, because there was no means of keeping retainers and servants at a respectful distance. In oblong halls the chieftain's end had usually a dais, and each retained had his rank acknowledged by the place he occupied in the hall, either near to his lord or far from him; but in round houses all this was impossible, since they were never large enough to admit of a real court life."

SOFT-DRINK MAN FINED.

Thaddeus M. Whitney of 471 Pennsylvania avenue, who is the proprietor of a soft-drink establishment at the same address, was fined $15 in Police Court yesterday on the charge of not properly cleaning and sterilizing his glasses. The case was investigated by Dr. T. M. Price, District chemist, who recently entered the store and photographed several of the paper cups and by means of detecting finger prints discovered that the cups had been reused several times.

Possibilities of Wood Construction

Carefully considered make it preferable to any other kind of material for home building. No one knows far ahead what changes may be desired in a house, but with frame construction additions and alterations can be easily made and even the whole house moved at small expense if desired. There are many other advantages too possessed by wood. Come in and let's talk them over.
